How To Grow Soybeans.

The soybean is one of the best forage plants among the legumes and it exceeds any of the others in yield of seed, says W. C. Etheridge of the Missouri College of Agriculture. It does not require a particular kind of soil. It will withstand a great deal of moisture and succumbs only where water stands on the land for a considerable time. On the other hand it is decidedly drought resistant.

For its best growth, the soybean requires better preparation of the land than is necessary for cowpeas, because it cannot compete with weeds and grass so well as cowpeas. Clean land, prepared as for corn, is necessary for a good crop.

The application of fertilizer to the soybean crop on either fertile or highly fertile land usually is not profitable. But on poor land good returns will nearly always follow a light application, 100 to 150 pounds per acre, of acid phosphate; or a light dressing, 5 or 6 loads per acre, of stable manure. There is seldom any profit in applying commercial nitrogenous fertilizers to soybeans, for this crop gets nitrogen from the air through the aid of nitrogen-gathering bacteria on its roots.

Although the soybean will grow on sour, poorly drained land much better than red clover and alfalfa, it is greatly benefited on such land by lime. In fact, under nearly all conditions a moderate application of lime will usually give good returns.

Although on fertile soils inoculation is not necessary for a thrifty growth, it will usually benefit the crop, and on poor land it is essential for even moderate growth. For sections into which the crop is newly introduced, regardless of the type of soil, artificial inoculation will nearly always give good returns. Inoculating material, and instructions for its use may be secured at cost from the Missouri College of Agriculture, Columbia, Mo.

The best date for planting soybeans will of course vary with the locality, but it is a safe practice to put in the crop about two week later than the average time of planting corn. The depth of planting is an important point. The seed must be planted shallow or poor stands will result. Experiments have proved that two inches is the most favorable depth.

For a crop planted in rows three feet apart—the best method where a seed crop is desired—15 to 20 pounds of seed will be required to the acre. A broadcasted or drilled crop—for hay—will require 60 to 90 pounds to the acre.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure catarrhal deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Many cases of deafness are caused by catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the mucous surface. Halls Catarrh Medicine acts thru the blood on the mucous surface of the system. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Catarrhal Deafness that cannot be cured by Halls Catarrh Medicine. Circulars free. H. J. CLEMENT & CO., Toledo, O.
